

Summary of Feedback

Hey Cas, well done! This is a really good reading summary. I'm going to include some general feedback here, and have attached an annotated version of your draft with more specific points.

There were a couple of things you did really well:

- You managed to simplify something that clearly contains a lot of complicated analysis and specific theory and break it down into a couple of key ideas. This was in particular really well done in the Approach. This makes it really readable for someone outside of the field.
- On the whole, your language is quite precise (most sentences could mean one thing and one thing only). This is particularly impressive given that you are simplifying complicated concepts to basic ideas. This makes it very readable.

A couple of broader things I noticed which you could work on were:

- As I said, in each section you focus on a couple of key ideas. There are some paragraphs where you discuss multiple ideas in the same paragraph. I would make each idea a separate paragraph, to make the distinction between them clearer and it easier for a reader to compartmentalise. I think you do this really well already in the "Contribution" section, and it would work well to extend that to the other sections.
- You are a very good writer, and your writing style is pleasant to read. However, this sometimes comes at the cost of not being particularly concise. I've pointed out a couple of cases of this in the entry, but in general I would always think "have I said this in the most concise way possible".
